Releases - The National Maritime Center's website receives Gold Award from the American Association of Webmasters

The National Maritime Center's website, www.TheNMC.org, designed by TNMC's webmaster Eryn Welch, has received The American Association of Webmasters "Gold Award" for excellence in design and content. The Gold Award represents outstanding web site design, interesting content, and user friendliness with ease of navigation. The award also certifies that the TNMC website is well organized, uses advanced design features, and provides quality information for its visitors.

"The awards of The American Association of Webmasters are among the most prestigious available—and hence, among some of the more difficult to win on the web," said Donna Snyder, CEO, American Association of Webmasters. "The Gold Award itself represents the pinnacle of web site design in the United States. Accordingly, only a small portion of the applicants will eventually secure this coveted prize as they are awarded only to those webmasters who have excelled in all fields of the criteria."

TNMC's website was redesigned by Welch and re-launched last fall with an exciting new format. Virtual visitors can get educational materials and curriculum, ask science questions, play games, and join forums as well as get operational information about the Center.
